

Talking to the Wall

A man. A city. A Wall.
And the One who listens.

Rehov Habikurim 19.
Second floor.
Two balconies.
A giant ceiling.
A view of the Temple Mount.

I live alone in a big house,
and I have no one to talk to.
So I go to the Wall—to the One who lives on the other side.

Here I am again:
frustrated, dried out,
resentful.
Not wishing anybody well.
Trapped in my own hell.

Late at night
I leave my apartment and follow the circling streets toward the Chain.

...past the alleys...

...the butcher,
the spice merchant,
the barber shop...

...to the Street of the Chain...

...and down toward the Kotel.

I descend the steps, and pass through the checkpoint...

...joining the stream of people, carrying one private storm among thousands.

Make me generous again.
Return me to the human race.
Bring back the caring,
the concern,
the good-heartedness.

I want to belong to the heart of the world—to the mercy that reaches even the most foolish and cruel.

Master of the universe, redeem us. Bring us out of the living death.
We are counting on You.

Who are you performing for?
Are you praying—or putting on a show? Are you connected to God, or trapped in social theater?

I am brokenhearted,
but even broken pieces can become something whole.
If God wants to make a Humpty Dumpty out of me, He has the power.

And still the paranoia returns: maybe there's a transmitter in the bag.
A testimony that I'm out of control. Still far from salvation.

Save me from the yetzer hara.
Give me clarity now—not later.
I'm thermonuclear: if I don't release this energy, it becomes my master.

Ribbano Shel Olam, show me Your way. Help me walk it with dignity—not like a drunk pounding on Your door.
Enough. I want to do teshuvah.

Yud-Heh-Vav-Heh,
surround me. Reform me.
Reshape me. Wrap me in the great, beating womb of healing.

I don't believe in the physical world.
I believe only in You.
Everything else feels unreal—but it is Your will that I act well inside it.

To be continued...

Talking to the Wall

A man. A city. A Wall. And the One who listens.

Page 2

Down the ancient steps—each step closer.

The smells, the spices, the life—all Your creation.

The butcher, the spice merchant, the barber shop—Your world.

...through linking alleys, where every stone knows Your name.

Pigeons and doves, wheel above me, reminding me of a higher sky.

Almost there. My heart races—not from the climb, but from what I need to say.

Through the checkpoint. The noise falls away. Now it is just You and me.

And there it is—the Wall. But really, I am talking to You: the One on the other side.

Here I am again: frustrated, dried out, resentful. Trapped in my own hell.

Make me generous again. Return me to the human race and the good-heartedness.

I want to belong to the heart of the world—to mercy that reaches even the foolish and cruel.

Who are you performing for? Are you sincere, or playing a part? Are you connected to God—or trapped in theater?

God, help me be purehearted. I am broken and scattered. Gather me. Give me the power to begin again.

The paranoia returns: maybe there is a transmitter in the bag. Proof that I am out of control. Still far from salvation.

Save me from the yetzer hara. Give me understanding now. I'm thermonuclear; if I do not direct this energy, it becomes my master.

And maybe that is what I do to God: reject His yoke, then blame the world. His word is near—close to the heart and mouth.

Ribbano Shel Olam, show me Your way. Help me enter it with dignity. Enough self-betrayal. I want to do teshuvah.

I know I cannot live effectively by denying the world. Your will is that I act well inside it. Reform me. Give me strength. Thank You.

To be continued...

Talking to the Wall

ברוכים הבאים

Welcome to the Western Wall

أهلاً وسهلاً

Through the checkpoint. Closer now. My heart is racing.

There it is—the Kotel. So many people, each with a private hope. And I am one small soul among them.

Yud-Heh-Vav-Heh, Master of the universe, redeem us. Bring us out of the living death. We are counting on You.

The paranoia returns: maybe there is a transmitter in the bag. A testimony that I am out of control. Destructiveness still circles.

I call out to the righteous, gentle, merciful, giving—all-providing. Cleanse me of filth, dependency, and fear. I am utterly dependent on You.

Save me from the yetzer hara. Give me clarity now. Do not let this restless energy become my master.

All my broken pieces can be brought together and set into one new shape. If God wants to repair me, He can.

I do not believe in the world as separate from You. Everything is held inside Your will. Let me be useful there.

Ribbano Shel Olam, show me Your way. Help me follow it with dignity. Enough hypocrisy. I want to do teshuvah.

Help me stop being arrogant and hard. Help me be kind, steady, and present. Let me play my part cleanly.

Surround me. Reform me. Reshape me. Wrap me in the warmth of healing.

Return me to caring. Make me generous. Reconnect me to mercy—even for the foolish and cruel.

I know this world can change in any shape You desire. When You want it. How You want it. I believe in You.

Thank You. I am still frustrated, but I have choices. I will move, control my hunger, and focus.

Thank You for listening. You know my heart, and my struggle. I know You are with me. I am not alone.

Here I am, talking to the Wall. And I know You are listening.

A MAN.
A CITY.
A WALL.
AND THE ONE WHO LISTENS.

The conversation continues...
Page 4

Talking to the Wall

A man. A city. A Wall.
And the One who listens.

Page 4

Here I am—not performing, not pleading for people. Just between You and me.

Yud-Heh-Vav-Heh,
Master of the universe,
redeem us.
Bring us out of the living death. We are counting on You.

Make me generous.
Return me to the human race. Bring back the caring, the concern,
the good-heartedness.

Surround me.
Take me in. Reform me.
Reshape me.
Let healing become a world around me.

I can be brokenhearted and purehearted too.
Broken does not mean worthless. Gather the pieces and make something whole.

My broken pieces—brought together.
Not erased.
Transformed.

Save me from the yetzer hara.
Give me clarity.
Do not let the fire rule me;
teach me to use it.

The paranoia returns—
but now I can name it.
Fear is not prophecy.
A thought is not a command.

I will stop feeding the hunger that consumes everything. I will move.
I will focus.
I will choose what matters.

I want my daughter to be able to stay.
That means I must move.
Give me clarity,
provision, and courage.

I cannot fight every battle. Maybe I do not have to win. Maybe I only have to move.

I will live in the world
You made. I will act well in it, even when it feels unreal.

I am dependent on You—but not helpless.
With every honest step,
You bring the ground beneath me.

Ribbono Shel Olam, help me walk Your path with dignity. Let me join life instead of standing outside it.

Help me be humble,
kind, and present.
Let me be there for others
when they need me.

You are everywhere.
You fill my thoughts.
You fill my time.
You are the pulse of what is happening.
Thank You.

Here I am,
talking to the Wall.
And I know
You are listening.

To be continued...